

In 1957, DCC was called on to oversee construction of a Distant Early Warning (DEW) Line. Located in the Canadian Arctic, the DEW Line was built to help protect North America from a cross-polar, Soviet-led invasion. More than 50 years later, our team is back on site, decommissioning the DEW Line and, in the process, conducting one of North America's largest ever environmental clean-ups.

Defence Construction Canada was founded in 1951 to manage some of Canada's major military infrastructure projects on behalf of the Department of National Defence (DND). As DND's operational requirements have grown and expanded over the years, so has our organization. Today, we not only help DND build infrastructure in Canada and abroad, but we also help plan the department's infrastructure needs years into the future.

Here to serve, part of DND's team

As a result of our long-standing partnership with DND, DCC has developed a considered, well managed approach to infrastructure planning that guarantees our client's interests and maximizes use of private sector resources. In this regard, DCC is a unique organization. We are singularly focused on the established and emerging needs of our client. Separate and distinct, we stand beside DND in all it does.

Doing business with DCC is easy

After more than 50 years working with DND, DCC has developed an unmatched understanding of the department's needs. As a result, we have streamlined our processes and made the experience of working with DCC as simple as possible.

Here are five reasons why it is easy to work with us.

- We deliver. We provide immediate and reliable access to technical and administrative expertise, and we are always available at each of the Canadian Forces' 42 bases, wings and area support units.
- We are flexible. As a Crown corporation, we have a large base of skilled personnel and can assign the right people to any job on short notice.
- We are focused. DND is our principal client. No one understands DND's needs like we do.
- We are cost effective. Our fees are established on a cost-recovery basis, and we help DND save money on private sector consulting and construction work.
- We understand service. We know how the construction industry and the public sector work, and act as an effective mediator between both parties.

More than just construction

From project need planning through building decommissioning, our work covers a broad spectrum of activity. DCC's resources are divided among five service lines.

- Construction Services

DCC's largest service line is also its oldest. Our Construction Services support the creation, renovation and maintenance of facilities for DND's infrastructure and environment program.

- Contract Services

The Contract Services team oversees the procurement of goods and professional, construction and maintenance services to fulfill Canada's domestic and international defence infrastructure needs.

- Project & Program Management Services

The Project & Program Management service line advises DND on matters such as building requirements, program planning, and schedule and document control.

- Environmental Services

Environmental Services helps DND meet environmental performance targets, comply with regulatory requirements, and manage due diligence and risk.

- Real Property Management Services

From needs planning to facility decommissioning, our Real Property Management team ensures DND's realty assets are managed efficiently throughout their life cycles.
